I was always an energetic child with love for extreme sports and music of all kinds that is still with me the day I'm writing this and probably when you're reading it. I was neither good nor bad at school. I was good at things that piqued my interest such as information technology, English language and most science classes, but I was bad with Hungarian literature and history as I didn't find them interesting. During my elementary school years I was into skateboarding which led me to a lot of nice memories including a few podium places at [REDACTED] contests. I have never been religious and always had a more science based belief. I'm a perfectionist to myself but acceptive to others. I had a quick temper as a kid which the constant fight with my brother helped to sooth into the calmest mind that is almost impossible to anger. I work in technical support and most of my jobs revolved around customer service such as hospitality or retail. It is not my dream job, however I have the skills for it which makes it easier until I figure out the final goal. As a kid I hated reading as it was part of the classes that could not hold my interest, but as an adult this changed as I have read 50+ books in the past 7ish years. I love YA (Young Adult) fiction such as Shadowhunters (which is around 20 books long at the time of writing), the Kate Daniels series or the Blood Kissed series but generally anything with angels, demons, werewolves, vampires, witches and the like will be an interesting read for me.

So I'm sure your parents told you, you were donor conceived when they deemed you older enough to understand what that meant. I was just a small part in the process of bringing you into this world. It's parents that went through a longer journey. I hope life is everything you ever imagined or wanted, but it isn't, that means it's far from the end. There have been times when things got me down but it always got better without fail as that is the way of life so never give up on your dreams. If your hopes ever falter, remember that you might not see the end of the road in the fog but you can carry on just by seeing one step at a time until you reach the destination. Don't be afraid if you haven't figured out everything yet. We learn something new every day. Spend time in nature, go see the world. There are a lot of places that will feel like a dream or like you're in a movie scene. Take care and don't do anything I wouldn't ;)
