I introduced myself briefly so that you can get a little idea of the genetic, emotional, and personal load that I have. I was born and lived in Brazil [REDACTED] where I had a peaceful childhood, but governed by customs, traditions, and a lot of discipline. I am very active, cheerful, charismatic, and smiling, I love to make people smile, I love dancing, cooking, sports, trails in the mountains, play in the parks with my kids. I like to sleep, but I wake up early to do anything because time is too short to be wasted lying down on a bed. Throughout my life, I studied Administration and Business and a Master's in Knowledge Management Engineering. I like to work with numbers, I love working with people and always looking to cultivate lifelong friends. I have a strong temper, sometimes stubborn, but usually when I'm right. I like things the right way, without injustice, discrimination, or prejudice. I value family and I work hard to always be together and united. [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] I decided with my wife to leave our entire life in Brazil and move [REDACTED] to have a better quality of life and give a better future with more opportunities for our children (at the time we only had one girl). We have been living in [REDACTED] for four years and we are happy and sure of the choice we made. And in a way, I hope you are also right and happy with your choice to have a child. Having a child is an immense joy, but being a parent is a blessing from God! I say this because I think that when you decide to be a father/mother, it is much more special, magical and important than having a child. You need to change your personality, polish your character and be prepared to be a role model for your child. I am the youngest son of three brothers and a very large family on my mother's side (11 uncles and more than 35 cousins). I think because I'm always involved at parties, family gatherings, I always wanted and dreamed of having mine. Today my wife and I have two children (a biological girl and a boy) and another adopted child that God chose me to take care of. I try to have moments that are unforgettable for them, just as I want you to have with your children. We are Catholics, and on Sundays, we are always in church praying and thanking God for the blessings that God allows us to receive and we try to practice gratitude, kindness, and solidarity among our children. I know it's hard to make some decisions, especially having a child. Congratulations to future dads for making this decision, I wish you to be very happy It is realized just as we are with our children and that at the right time, we can meet, introduce our families and thank God for one more blessing decided for all of us. I wish that your child is healthy, radiant, and blessed and that he shows his heart with much love, joy, and pride. God bless you all
