I am a kind of stubborn, strong willed guy. I commit all I've got towards achieving my goals but tend not to take advice too seriously.

I've been the same since I was little. I never liked rules as a kid and always had a strong sense of adventure, which is I guess why I ended up living abroad. All school subjects came naturally to me but due to me being a lazy kid and refusing to study I only achieved moderately good grades. I guess in this sense I'm a lot like my father who likes to do things his way, while my mother was always the more protective kind.

I'm a dark blond guy with hazel eyes. I am of average height, athletic although a bit on the skinny side despite being physically active. I'm a spitting image of my father and grandfather when they were my age. Both my mother and my brother have a small birthmark on their left hand. I have it too although it's on my left thigh.

I like trekking, hiking, climbing, history, science, museums and all things music. I love nature as much as the man made wonders of this world.

I believe we are here for each other and that you cannot get far on your own. For me what matters is being kind and to support each other. Only this way we can keep going further and further which is also why I decided to donate for the programme.

Hi, I'm your biological dad.

You might've known for a while or have found out fairly recently that you have been conceived as a result of a donation and I understand how it might come as a bit of a shock to you, but I sincerely hope that you have had an amazing, happy, fulfilling and eventful life prior to reading this message and that you will step into this world as a bright, energetic adult, ready to take on any challenge that comes your way. At this very important age it might all seem uncertain or scary and hard but life can also be very beautiful and rewarding.

My advice to you is to be patient and not to worry too much. Everything will come to you naturally. You've come this far, you've absolutely got what comes after.

It might be a bit weird reading all of this but I wanted to give as many of you as possible the chance to experience the beauty of our world.

I am absolutely sure that your parents love you very dearly and I am grateful to them for raising such an amazing person.

All the love in the world,

Your biological father
