I am a second generation immigrant to the UK, so I was born in the UK and my parents were from Hong Kong area. As a child, I was active and very curious. Probably more of a try, than listen child. However I suffered from hayfever, which drew me to computers as a way to (ironically) avoid rubbing my eyes constantly from the pollen. In school, I was quite good at Mathematics and the sciences, however my language skills aren't quite so good. I was placed in a grammar school and ended up in university studying computer science.

My career is in IT, mainly as it has allowed me to fund my hobbies and travelling.

My hobbies:

- Playing games (such as board/video games) are quite important to my life.
- Making video games in my spare time as a way to express some of my creativity.
- Climbing, I only started in the past 5 years, but I really enjoy the challenges it brings.
- Socialising, I do enjoy listening to other (particularly new) people's lives and experiences. Some people have commented I have a lot of friends.
- Travelling, seeing other cultures and experiences is always fun, but I like to take my time when doing so now. Overall, I have travelled to dozens of countries.

I never actively played any musical instruments as a child, but it turns out I have reasonable ability to play harmonicas, and there is a reasonable amount of musical talent in the family tree.

I am not religious, I do think however religion has some useful lessons on how to live one's life. In terms of philosophy, I believe experiencing as much of life has to offer and generally with new people I will treat them with trust and respect (unless proven otherwise).

I am not a particularly relaxed individual, so I will usually prefer activities that stimulate my brain. I'm fairly creative and if it is something I am interested in, I can be quite the perfectionist.

Family trends

- Most of the immediate family looks much younger than their age, a 40 year old could pass as a 25-30 year old as an example
- Mathematics is a strong subject in the immediate family.

Hello, you may be wondering who I am and why I choose to donate. I wanted to help people have children, and it takes a lot of consideration to have a child through a donor, so I believed you would have a good chance at a great life! I do hope that has been true. If I am still around, you are welcome to approach me to find out more.
