I grew up in Hungary, in a small countryside town. Probably because of that I have always been fond of nature. I have an older brother and sister, and a younger brother. My two older siblings are from another dad and we grew up together. My younger brother [REDACTED] younger than me and he is from a different dad too. Our mum has always worked very hard to provide for us and make sure we have everything we need. Ours was a lower middle class family. This helped teach me the value of hard work and appreciation of small things.

I was a quiet, shy child. I enjoyed being in nature, reading books, watching television, and helping my mum cook. My favourite subjects in school were history, literature, geography, and foreign languages.

I love learning about the world that surrounds us.

I wasn't very good at science subjects. Only later in my life did I realise that it was my attitude that was wrong towards them though. I had an easy time learning my favourite ones, and I expected the same at all of them. Now, I know that science subjects require practice to get better at, and they won't just stick in my brain like the ones I like.

I also love sports. Mainly football and American football, but I have a surface-level interest in every other sport, too. Especially during bigger events like the Olympics. I believe sports in general have a lot to offer and teach to everyone.

My favourite books growing up were adventure, historical, sci-fi and fantasy novels. While still enjoying all of these today, I also read non-fiction books about business, psychology, philosophy, sciences, self development etc.

When it comes to religion, I consider myself agnostic. I don't think it matters whether there are any deities. We should behave virtuously because that's what makes the world a better place, and not because of the promise of reward in the afterlife.

I have an analytical approach to most things and problems in life. Sometimes maybe too much, so I need to work on my emotional intelligence. I constantly try to learn new things and improve myself. Always seeking new challenges as well. That's why I've lived in different countries in Europe and planning on moving to other continents too.

I prefer a bbq or a pub with friends over a loud club. I value good relationships, friendships. I'm lucky enough to have many close friends, some of them since childhood.

I have done different jobs in my life and I feel that managing people and projects have always been the closest to me. Recently, I've got hooked on software development, which I'm studying in my free time.

I have some friends who have had a hard time conceiving and tried IVF. I saw how stressful and desperate they were during this period.

When I heard about this clinic, I decided that I will try to help make it easier for people to go through this process.

I believe that everyone should have the possibility to be a parent and give someone the chance to experience life.

If there is one thing I wish I'd heard when I was young, is that no one is in charge of my happiness but I. We need to rely on ourselves and not look for excuses when we fail.

There is no greater joy, or responsibility than being a parent.

I wish strength, good health, luck, and happiness for the amazing journey of giving birth and raising children.
