About Me

I was a curious, playful, and pleasant child, always showing an extra urge to gain knowledge. Born into a middle-class, close-knit family consisting of my father, mother, and brother, I grew up in an environment filled with love, trust, and respect. These values have shaped who I am today and continue to guide me in all aspects of life.

In school, I excelled in subjects like English, science, social science, and regional languages, although I did struggle a bit with mathematics. Outside of academics, I developed a deep love for movies and traveling, alongside my passion for sports like cricket, football, and running.

I have also been actively involved in social causes. As a volunteer and former office bearer for the [REDACTED] party, I engaged in charity work, such as blood donation, fundraising, and food donation. I find great satisfaction in giving back to the community, and this remains a core part of my life.

In terms of my personality, I consider myself hardworking, always striving to balance my career with family values. I approach challenges thoughtfully and reflectively, ensuring I tackle them with care. I have pursued a BSc in Instrumentation, followed by further education in Supply Chain Management, which has led to a career in supply chain, logistics, marketing, and sales. Each role I've taken has allowed me to grow both personally and professionally.

Music and movies are my constant companions—I enjoy all types of music that I find enjoyable and am an avid fan of films, regardless of language or genre.

Beyond entertainment, sustainability and personal growth are essential to me. I deeply value trust, commitment, love, and respect, and I believe these qualities, along with career growth and strong relationships, are the most important aspects of life.
